Creating a Climate of Hope
New partnership engages west side residents in learning about climate change
By Lynne Zummo, Lisa Thompson, and Wisam Khudhair

UNP, the Natural History Museum of Utah (NHMU), and Hartland Community 4 Youth and Families (HC4YF) have launched a community-engaged research project to study how people learn about climate change in A Climate of Hope, a new exhibit opening at NHMU in November. The project is funded by a grant from the National Science Foundation that supports the work of all three partners.

In a departure from many climate change exhibits, A Climate of Hope tells the story of how we can build a thriving future in a world with a changing climate. With a clear-eyed view of the challenges we face, this solutions-focused exhibit highlights Utahns across the state implementing climate solutions that will improve our lives and helps visitors explore how they can take effective action in their communities.

By studying learning in A Climate of Hope—which offers a counternarrative to educational experiences that scare, polarize, and/or exclude—our partnership will work towards dismantling the current “spiral of silence” around climate change to help people think, feel, and talk productively about the issue. Other important goals include strengthening ties between westside families and NHMU and building research-based knowledge about how people with a diversity of lived experiences learn about the changing climate.

Gilberto Rejón Magana (Coach Juan) the Founder, Coach and Executive Director of HC4YF is hoping, the A Climate of Hope project will educate the Westside community about climate change issues.

“My community doesn’t have a clear answer or information about what climate change is, so by bringing this project to my community and getting them involved and being part of it, I think would understand the important stuff and would work for a better outcome.”

To ensure west side residents have an opportunity to engage with the exhibit, HC4YF will organize several field trips to NHMU each year. The grant will fund transportation and lunch for all field trip participants as well as gift cards to compensate adult participants for their time.

In addition, UNP and HC4YF are taking the lead on recruiting members of a west side community board, who will be hired to shape the research and revisions to the exhibit. The board will also create and launch a pilot project aimed at climate justice advocacy among West Side residents.
Engaging Parents for Student Success

By Erick Garcia

Last spring, Latinos In Action (LIA) and University Neighborhood Partners hosted a parent engagement class called Padres Comprometidos. The class, which was held once a week over 10 weeks, was taught in English and Spanish. It was hosted at Hunter High School in West Valley City. The main objective of the class was to teach parents about how to be active participants in their child’s education. Before understanding the education system, the parents developed a foundation by learning about effective communication with teenagers, and how to promote positive behaviors. The later sessions then teach parents about what it takes to be college ready and how they can support their children. Parents who took the class felt that they had more confidence in approaching a teacher and in talking with their student about their educational goals and values. This was a pilot program to gauge interest and our turnout was amazing! Over 60 parents graduated from our first class! Parent engagement is essential to student prosperity: through this LIA course, these parents have begun to set the stage for that future success.

UNP’s Evaluation Highlights

By Jennifer Mayer-Glenn

UNP does not run programs led by staff. It is a convener and catalyst for a growing network of partners and partnerships. Evaluating such a network is complicated. Decision making is decentralized, with each partnership developing its own goals. The impacts we care about have multiple causes, and often cannot be defined ahead of time. A network like this is a living system. It cannot be planned and controlled. It can only emerge. Below are highlights from UNP’s 2022-2023 network evaluation.

UNP’s Network by the Numbers

- 76 partnerships (up compared to 2022)
- 80 higher ed departments and offices (up compared to 2022)
- 150 organizations/institutions (up compared to 2022)
- 145 community residents leading partnerships (up compared to 2022)
- 477 partnership leads (up compared to 2022)
- 1160 connections between elements in the network (site compared to 2022)
- 6,329 total participation in partnership activities (up compared to 2022)

The New American Academic Network

NAAN connects individuals from immigrant and refugee backgrounds with higher education, creating pathways for them to return to school and/or employment in their chosen fields. Many new arrivals resettle with education and training from their countries of origin; however, without the necessary credentials to enter higher education or a professional level of employment.

- 38 participants, representing 14 countries of origin responded to this year’s NAAN survey. Highlights from the data are included here.

> “The NAAN program has helped me so much...this program always provides useful information and amazing opportunities.”
> - NAAN Participant

Carlos Palestina is a Rose Park resident. Last year, Carlos enrolled in the Fundamentals course with Westside Leadership institute, where he developed a community podcasting project. This year he returned as one of the instructors for the class. He is busy turning his project into a nonprofit organization, and has taken a position with Salt Lake City running the My Brother’s Keeper initiative, which works to create a city where boys and young men of color can thrive.

Get social with us! 👇
UNP Community Partnerships Course

Register Now!
By Kimberly Schmit

In January, we will again be offering the UNP Community Partnerships Course. The 8-week experience will bring together a group of local professionals who are interested in supporting their institutions and organizations in partnering with communities in more equitable and sustainable ways. Through facilitation and teaching, participants will collectively workshop their engagement ideas, leading to the completion of a concrete community partnership plan for their organization.

Past participants include staff from Salt Lake City’s Office of the Mayor, Office of Engagement and My Brothers Keeper, as well as Utah Transit Authority, Natural History Museum, the U’s Office of Sustainability, and members of the Utah Community Advocate Network. Parts of the course were also recently taught in a variety of local, national and international venues; including during a workshop in Bangkok, Thailand for Jesuit Refugee Service’s Asia Pacific staff.

When asked “What did you find most useful about this course?,” one participant responded, “I appreciated learning ways to use community partnerships as an asset in advancing strategic goals, mission statements and core values. I learned about how to keep these ideas in the forefront of agendas and power structures. I also learned about ways to work around institutional barriers where I work in order to support partnerships and communities.”

Classes are at Sorenson Unity Center on Mondays (1/29, 2/12, 2/26, 3/4, 3/18, 4/1, 4/15, 4/29) from 3-5 p.m.
Cost: $300 p/p, $250p/p for teams of 4+. Scholarships available. Register by Dec 1 by contacting Kimberly at k.schmit@partners.utah.edu

Clever Cucumber
Snapshots of wonderful west side businesses and restaurants

“Bringing purpose, healing, creativity, and connection to all neighbors of the West Salt Lake community through accessible and equitable art experiences.”

That is the mission statement at Clever Cucumber, a free community fine art workshop located in the Westpointe neighborhood of Salt Lake City. They offer free art classes, open studio time, art supply swaps, and some community projects. They recently completed the kiosk project described on the back (and featured on the front image) of this newsletter. Another community project currently underway is to install free art shop cabinets at various places in Salt Lake City’s west side neighborhoods. Anyone can go to the shop to access some supplies or to donate some for others to use. You might even see one soon at one of the UNP offices.

Visit their website to learn more at clevercucumber.com

Kimberly is the Director of Community Praxis, but has held many titles since joining UNP in 2004, while earning her master’s in Education, Culture & Society at the U. Her undergraduate degree is in modern dance, which she studied growing up in Utah, Missouri, North Dakota, and Chicago. For many years, she was a dancer, choreographer, and dance administrator. Eventually, she found herself wanting to create more system access for marginalized communities and she moved into the field of alternative education.

When she joined UNP she worked with residents to start the Hartland Partnership Center. Since, she has filled many roles, always working to understand the processes needed to create equitable partnerships that are rooted in authentic relationships and lead to system change.

Kimberly lives in SLC with her partner and daughter. She loves wandering the Wasatch Mountains, trying to keep up with her little family of rock climbers.
UNP COMMUNITY PARTNERSHIPS COURSE

UNP Instructors
Kimberly Schmit (Facilitator)
Dr. Teresa Molina (Guest Teacher)
Tek Neopany (Teaching Assistant)

Time
3 - 5 p.m.

Dates
Mondays
1/29, 2/12, 2/26, 3/4, 3/18, 4/1, 4/15, 4/29

Location
Sorenson Unity Center
1383 S 900 W, Salt Lake City, UT 84104

Cost
$300/person, $250/person for teams of 4 or more (teams encouraged to apply)* scholarships available

Contact by December 1st to Register
k.schmit@partners.utah.edu

Front feature image is a snapshot from a mosaic glass butterfly sculpture on top of a three sided kiosk that was created by Clever Cucumber with community volunteers. The kiosk serves as a community message board. This project was supported by Salt Lake City’s Love Your Block grant and by Rosepark Custom Woodworking. You can see the full project next to the Lion’s Pavilion at Riverside Park.

Newsletter design/editing by Jewell Morgan.